TAPESTRIES

61. ELIEZER BEFORE BETHUEL.
12 feet 7 inches by 13 feet 9 inches.
62. ABRAHAM AND ISAAC WELCOMING REBECCA,
12 feet 4 inches by 18 feet 9 inches.

Two Flemish tapestries of the Early XVI Century School of Jan Van Eyck, executed at the Brussels Manufactory. Both tapestries are woven in coloured worsteds and silk threads on flax warps, with scenes in the ancient Testament, illustrative of the History of Rebecca and Isaac. The smaller panel represents Eliezer asking Bethuel for the hand of his daughter Rebecca, for Isaac, the son of Abraham, his master; in the centre of the picture is the faithful messenger relating his mission to Bethuel and addressing to him his request to take his daughter back to Abraham and his son Isaac; in front of him is Rebecca speaking to her maids, and on the right is the imposing figure of Bethuel seated in a majestic attitude, while male and female attendants in sumptuous attire stand around. The scene is laid in a palatial hall of rich architectural design.

The larger panel illustrates the presentation of Rebecca to Abraham and his son Isaac. Rebecca and Isaac, with the Patriarch in the act of giving them his blessing, form the central group in the picture, and Rebecca's suite of richly-clad attendants with their handsomely caparisoned horses, and servants of Abraham, stand on the right and left, or against the mountainous landscape background.

The cartoons are attributed to Jan Mostaert, a painter who was born at Harlem in 1474, and died in 1556; he so successfully adhered to the traditions of the School of Jan Van Eyck that among other works of his, an Adoration of the Magi, in Brussels, was long ascribed to the latter; Mostaert, owing to his great respect for the ancient and also to his immense talent, it may be said that he resumed the whole school in himself for his works recalled all at once the bluish mountainous distances of Jan Van Eyck, the richly-embroidered and jewelled fabrics of Memling, the grandiose architectural conceptions of Bernard van Orley and Bouts' correction in details, while for force of colour he yielded to none; with him disappeared the last Flemish Gothic painter.

The date of execution of these fine tapestries must be placed between 1520 and 1528, but as the compulsory marking of Brussels Tapestries did not come into force until the latter date, it is next to impossible to ascertain the name of the weaver, though in all probability they were the work of Pierre de Pannemaker; however, as far as is at present known, any information which may have existed on this particular point was destroyed when the Brussels archives were burnt down in the seventeenth century.

63. SCENE FROM ANCIENT HISTORY,

Flemish, 11 feet 7 inches by 8 feet 10 inches.

Perhaps an event of the Trojan War, cut down from a larger tapestry, with a wide Renaissance border that is especially rich and pleasing.

64. SOLOMON AND QUEEN OF SHEBA,

Flemish; a Renaissance tapestry, 11 feet 11 inches by 13 feet 2 inches, with typical Renaissance border.

It has been cut down some, but the composition still remains interesting, and is interestingly backgrounded by the landscape and buildings.

65. DIANA ENCOURAGING MELEAGER TO PRESENT THE BOAR'S
HEAD TO ATALANTA,

12 feet 4 inches by 13 feet 5 inches.

Woven in Paris in the first half of the seventeenth century, in the shops established at the Gobelins, in 1601, under the protection of Henry IV, by two Flemish merchant weavers, Comans and Planche; or in the independent works established after his father's death in another part of the city by Raphael de la Planche, whose monogram R appears on other tapestries woven by him. Possibly the R in the right selvage of the tapestry before us is his signature, although it is confused by another letter that cuts into it. The story of "Diana" designed by Tous-saint and Dubreuil, is one of the most famous sets of tapestries ever woven, and with "Artemisia" series did much to establish the high reputation of the early Gobelins. The set in the National French Collection, rich with gold, and the set in the Imperial Austrian Collection, as well as the set in the Royal Spanish Collections, are admired by all who see them. In the United States there are at least two sets, one of them a set of five, rich with gold, lent to the Hartford Museum by Mr. Morgan. The border of the tapestry before us is characteristic of the period.

66. VERDURE TAPESTRY,

XVIII Century (Made in France by Flemish weavers).
